

Wednesday morning.

Dear Dick,

Since writing you yesterday afternoon, about our coming over next Tuesday to find "Grandpa" John Vincent's grave, it has occurred to me that if the tombstone could be ready, we could just put it up on the same trip and then it would be done, forever and ever. I'd like so much to know that it is finished.

I enclose the inscription which I'd like put on it. I think all of this is important. We could take along the cement and tools and just put it up.

I'll bring a roll of films, and you have my kodak out ready so we can take pictures also.

Anything else?

With love,

Maud

but I think it important that these words be used.
